After disgraced royal ignores investigators,
PM says he should divulge what he knows

STARMER PILES PRESSURE ON ANDREW TO TESTIFY IN U.S. OVER EPSTEIN

IR Keir Starmer has heaped pressure on Andrew Mountbatten-Windsor to give evidence to the US Congress about what he knows about Jeffrey Epstein.

The disgraced royal has so far ignored a request by American politicians to come forward with information about the paedophile financier and his network of contacts. Last night Sir Keir told reporters at the G20 summit in South Africa: 'Anybody who has got relevant information in relation to these kinds of cases should give evidence.' When pressed directly about whether that principle applied to Andrew, he added: 'In the end, that will be a decision for him. But my general position is if you have relevant information you should be prepared to share it.'

Democratic members of the House oversight committee issued a summons to the former Duke of York to 'come forward' about his 'ties' to the convicted paedophile, but he did not respond within a two-week
